

The great reset: How America is on the hardest of times

By Professor Credo and Dr. N. Igmar

Professor Credo:

Its 2020, people on the streets of America are rioting. Buildings set on fire, looting, destruction of public monuments it's a global thing, yet no one raises a hand. How and why is this happening anyways? It's a question we are gonna make on this work.

From Credo's and Nigmar's conversations:

"...a person with out challenges will develop weak, lazy, and with out knologed of how reality is and works see those people that preach equality and hugs for everyone, including people that are clearly not safe to have around this people eventually reach into positions of power, not because they are good for the job but of a combination of "Popularity" beteewn their weak similars, and the lack of actual strong people plus, the old and different will get repeled, as we are seeing nowadays then, comes the second point: Our differences in the past, all differences where talked, debated, and tried to reach to a healthy conclusion, like they did the greeks, arent they? thats as far as we can drag it to be honest, because it hadent worked or been tried on the same level of healthy way's as before its more easy to be represented by someone, and to cheer like a monkey on a stadium watching a soccer match for your "team" and its not only on politics, its also presented on our cultural differences, we know this well you and I"

For starters, we gonna have to point out the most basic points we know: cultural, economic and social problems.

In the Cultural, we got a nation build upon a mixture of ethnicities, all huddled togheter in the hopes of making it work, sadly, the men of the past thought that opening their arms in forgiveness was the right way for their children, and that just created more problems: a generation of young men who are afraid of "whats wrong", letting those who they hoped to "Help and heal" push them over, with out repercussions.

This leads us into the social matters, where the American society devolved into just a bunch of soccer fans that do nothing but scream at each other, in the hopes to support their favorite team. This, mixed with a generations of weak minded mens who seek the approval of their also weak citizens, created a society that prefers to push away those with different ideas rather than work on better solutions and ideas for their surroundings.

Finally, we reach to the economical factors of the problem, which are the culminating point for most if not all problems in society. A weak and imporvished great nation will be a fertile ground of spawning new radical ideas. We had seen this through history already, from Europe to Asia, and its no different from whats happening on America right now. This is usually also fueled by the discontent of people, which is fueled by the same economic reasons.

Dr. N. Iqmar:

As Credo stated, in 2020 many things went insane globally, whether it was from the pandemic or from the rioting of the disgruntled masses of black people. In my opinion, the turmoil of 2020 was in part due to the significance of being an election year in the U.S.A. To the establishment, Donald Trump has always been an outsider and it has sought to smear him, attack him, and throw him out of office at every possible interval. The establishment has been building up to the events of 2020 being used against Trump ever since he took office. 2020 was a year of seemingly constant turmoil because the establishment sought to hurt Trump's reputation, most notably constantly blaming Trump for his actions or inactions, often shifting the goalpost.

While I don't personally support Trump anymore, viewing him as controlled opposition (favoring Zionism over nationalism and his voter base), I can not deny the reality of the establishment, or the "swamp" as Trump called it, being a significant role in the turmoil of the U.S.A. though. In fact, I would say it is perhaps the root of all the corruption in the U.S.A. that is poisoning the well for the American people. The establishment includes but is not limited to: the media, bankers, elites, government, certain companies & NGOs, conspiratorial groups, etc. The establishment composes everything that we surround ourselves in society, the operators of the Matrix if you will.

I think the ultimate goal of the establishment is the enslavement of its people while robbing everything from them in the process. Those who comprise the establishment do not care for those beneath them seeing them as stepping stones, a means to an end. This should be deeply alarming to anyone who is remotely interested in politics, but most do not see this aspect of society bent on controlling them because they are often too distracted by other meaningless things to rebel against those who control them.

For example, sugar is loaded into many foods in America beyond what would be reasonable 50 years ago as we transitioned from putting fats in food to sugar, as fats were derided as making people "fat". However, this is simply not true because fat is already broken down in its most basic form whereas sugar is not; sugar needs to be processed by your liver and then turns into excess fat. Sugar requires the action of the liver to be turned into fat meaning it will be stored for longer than just regular already broken down fat, and this is why sugar has been pushed so hard in many foods we eat today and why obesity rates have been skyrocketing from decades past. A large portion of the things in place are by design to create a certain array of effects, intentional or not, and obesity from higher sugar intakes is one of them.

The establishment prefers a weak, docile population because it is easier to control. If everyone is too fat to get out of their chairs, then no one will be able to take action, whether in protest, boycott, violence, rebellion, revolution, etc. against the establishment. This is why the establishment does not have the peoples' interests in mind: it seeks to wring the people dry and make them compliant in the peoples' own perverse exploitation.

And this is also why The Great Reset is so alarming. The establishment plans to fully enslave the global population of humanity in a culmination of perhaps the greatest, unprecedented consolidation of power in a series of significant social changes to come. The worst part is that given the state of how the majority of people are not willing or able to take action, the establishment will likely have no problem brainwashing the masses of The Great Reset that is to come.

Here's my predictions of what is to come of The Great Reset:

- Good portion of people will be forced to live in cities;
- Suburbs will be squeezed by corporations buying up land like BlackRock inc;
- No one will own anything: everything will be rented, permanently, for maximum profit to the renter(s);
- Everyone vaccinated for Covid-19 will likely die prematurely due to mRNA and or spike protein complications;
- Most boomers in America will be killed off with vaccines to even out the age of population spread and to get social security under control.
- Automation is going to significantly increase by 2025 taking over most jobs of the people dying from Covid-19 vaccination;
- Family will be a thing of the past as people are more isolated than ever, living in the pod;
- People will resort and or forced to eat bugs as compared to traditional sources of protein, such as meat, are deliberately shorted to the general population;
- Global institutions like the United Nations (UN) will come to power overseeing national governments and borders will be erased;
- A global social credit system will be introduced, likely after vaccination passports are eased in;
- Dissenters to the New World Order (NWO) will be "re-educated" and or jailed;
- and etc.

On the "three points":

As Mentioned before on Nigmar's prediction, there are certain things that will change once "the great reset" comes upon us. From this predictions, we can take out 3 main ideas we will discuss on the following parts of the text: Changes on the economic ways of living, Changes on the living standard of individuals, and globalization. This three points encompass most of the points made by Nigmar before, and its vital importance to understand why and how will this affect the individual as a whole.

Changes on the economical ways of living

The first change that is going to happen (if not happening already), is the economic change that will surge through this decade, where slowly but surely, people will start losing part of their freedom thanks to the corporations and governments. An example of this could be the idea of company's acquiring terrains and forcing people to move to the cities. This not Will only creates a "hyper-development" on the cities that will inevitably create a dysfunctional society where competition for the minimum will be the norm, but it will also create a bigger control on us as individuals, leading to a dependency or sick integration of work into our life (And for whoever is reading, yes, its obvious that work is already a fundamental part of our life, but what I am refeering to, is that our jobs will not only be part of our life, but also be part of our social life, our every day is dictated by many parts of our routine, and work will play an even role on this, as it will start gaining a bigger grip on our lifes). One example could be the "Cages", little boxes where employees can relax, all under the generous offer of Amazon. This, started as a joke inside the younger people on social media, who laughed at those who overworked on regular jobs, now is a reality, and it can only get worse, as people already where laughing about consuming insects as proposed by a few, and acquiring "Pods" for living instead of full rooms. This will lead to even lower living standars like the aforementioned "pods". At the end of the day, the competition will be high and the reward low, where people will pay a lot for the bare minimum, thinking its normal to live on a container or pod, eating the minimum on a excesive ammount of hours of work, eating bugs, living on a dependant way of their new masters, believing that winning X quantity of money is great, that affording not only bugs, but the best bugs, is such a pleasure, and that at the end of the day you are such a lucky guy, will become the reality of many.

Changes on the standars of living

The pod is just the beggining. Changes humanity will suffer are not only on their pockets, but also on the way they live. One of the weirdest agendas that we can see is the change beteewn meat to bugs, an "extravagant" meal, to change our entire diet from meat to bugs seems quite nightmarish. We will see more "anti-suicide" ropes on buildings, it will slowly become less of an Asian thing, and more of a global thing. Not only that, but our ways of being will also be changed by society (which has always shaped us, yet now is gonna be an entire 180° change), where free thinking will be the wrong, and following the flock will be the correct thing, granting us access to placebos and such. A citizen that doesn't think or question goverment decisions is a good citizen after all.

Globalization

We had seen this before, anyone who knows a bit about economics or politics will know what "globalization" means. In this case, it will be a bit early on when the real effects will take place. For now, globalization can be see on two ways: as a great oportunity for economic and cultural enrichment, or as a way of replacement for the countries who have low birth rates. And not only the birth rates, we can in fact, expand this idea even more, to the point where we can think of erasing the borders, our cultural differences, and all of us a same blob of uncolored mass that cannot be distinguished from each other.

Of course, that would be just a crazy theory, there is no way a country would let entire cities get overrun by immigrants and change its landscapes for money, right?

We live on an era of changes.

Final Thoughts

Credo's:

I personally dislike the way our world and society had started to shape. Years ago we had more freedom and perhaps we were more friendly to each other. The agendas that are being pushed around the globe won't fix our problems, only increase them, as it is on my belief that this kind of things are fragile, they take time to shape, yet taking away the will of the people, their freedom, won't fix anything, and it will throw us again into an eternal loop where we, as humanity, don't learn anything more than to survive another day.

What is happening right now will eventually make the system collapse, people will explode in anger, and at least one side of the coin will fall face's up, leading to another era of rising ideology's and crumbling empires, and is because of our mistakes, that this will happen, and us as individuals, are part to blame, not just because we participate on our society, but because we let those people represent us, we let our emotions take the best of us, and we decided to act as kids on a football game on such important matters as it is our society and politics, that had led to today's present, and the upcoming future.

Be sure that none of us is really prepared, yet we will all see it when it happens, and if you manage to get through, be glad that you might be there to build a different future.

Nigmar's:

Things can only get better if individuals take action. But man can not expect to improve the world if he can not improve himself. This lies at the core of the problem afflicting America. Most people are unwilling or unable to enact change which is why it is absolutely important for people to improve themselves first. People need to take action in their own lives improving themselves such as weight-lifting, learning a skill, getting finances in order, quitting pornography, etc. Strong men are going to be needed to fix the collapsing society we find ourselves in.

To anyone reading this, I strongly recommend becoming self-sufficient and improving yourself on a daily basis to better your situation. Once you manage to maintain that, consider taking action at the local level in politics becoming invested in your community and strengthening the bonds in it. The local level of politics is going to be the frontline for most of America and the world as far as the shitstorm that is to come with The Great Reset. Investing in your future is important to the health of our countries because it lays the foundation for the present. Right now, things are likely only going to get worse as The Great Reset swings into full effect, so it's important for individuals to recognize their own responsibilities to prepare and help shape the future they want for themselves in society.

Learn some survival skills like boiling water to purify it, create a daily exercise routine, and or take up a hobby like gardening. Be the change you want to see in the world.
